Patrick Reicher has over 12 years of experience in the forensic investigation, evaluation, and repair design of buildings and enclosures, from recently constructed to historic structures. His responsibilities have included project management of the initial evaluation phase through final construction, preparation of contract documents, bidding assistance, and construction contract administration. His background also includes experience in the structural design for new construction and adaptive reuse projects.

His investigations have consisted of a wide range of building types, enclosure systems, and materials, associated with masonry facades, exterior wall cladding systems, windows and curtain walls, and roofing and waterproofing systems. He has expertise in performing diagnostic field testing in accordance with ASTM and AAMA standards, and developing field quality control specifications for repair design programs.

During his career, he has developed forensic investigation testing protocols and has provided litigation support services for several projects.

Prior to RRJ, he gained experience in forensic engineering and structural design at two consulting engineering firms in the Chicago area. While a student at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, he worked as a consultant for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers Construction Engineering Research Laboratory (CERL).
